

SYNOIZ

Due to popular demand Synoiz has released the fan-favourite track “Falling Snow” for free download over the Christmas period. Currently he is busy promoting his new single “Getting Safer” from the debut album “Ambients” but agrees that Falling Snow is a very suitable song for the season.

Synoiz says:

“It’s good to see Falling Snow getting some attention again. It’s quite a nice little song for Christmas and so it’s a shame that the release date for my current single Getting Safer kept being pushed back and ended up getting released this close to the holidays. It would have been nice to have had some free time to promote a proper release of Falling Snow with a video and/or proper website, but instead the best I can do is make the MP3 and some artwork available to anyone who fancies it.”

“Falling Snow is a track I made about a year back just after finishing the Ambients album which has only just got its own release. I remember I was feeling particularly festive and had just gotten back from a walk where I’d taken the photograph that ended up being used on the artwork for the song. It came together really quickly and was pretty well received by the limited amount of people that got to hear it. A lot of fans have said it’s very different to the rest of my music because it has such an optimistic and rather organic feel to it. I guess this just shows you how much the instruments you choose can affect a song, there are very few of my trademark synths or choral patches to be found and so it makes it quite an interesting piece for me. Hope you like it.”

“Falling Snow” will be released as part of “Soundtract”, the forthcoming second album by Synoiz sometime in 2010.
